Industrial Foundation Matches $25,000 For Prison Land Sale

The following statement was issued by the Lindsay Industrial Foundation, Monday:

An option for land has been purchased near Lindsay for a proposed geriatric correctional facility to be constructed and operated by Corplan Corrections, Inc. of Argyle, TX.

Sixteen similar facilities, operating as Community Education Centers, are operated by the organization. The announcement was made by the Lindsay Industrial Foundation, a group of men and women founded to promote jobs and/or industry in the area.

Initial agreements have been accepted between Corplan Corrections, Inc., and the Lindsay Industrial Development Authority, the Lindsay Industrial Foundation Inc., and the City of Lindsay.

According to Corplan Corrections Inc., some of the initial agreements include: the City of Lindsay will incur no

(which, of course, will require Lindsay was converted several no new taxes to residents); operation of the facility alone will generate 100 jobs to Lindsay and surrounding areas, and construction in itself will generate additional sales tax revenue and many jobs; the City of Lindsay will benefit by several hundred thousand dollars yearly through utilities supplied to the facility; and the City of Lindsay will also receive a fee based on the number of correctional residents in lieu of tax income, and the fee will eventually amount to over a half million dollars annually.

Corplan Corrections, Inc. will assume a significant portion of water treatment plant improvements, construction of an electrical sub-station, and sewage treatment plant. The portion of the land not used by the correctional facility will be available to the City of Lindsay (which could use the land for additional industrial development).

years ago to care for patients in state correctional facilities. The good working relationship already in place between the Lindsay Municipal Hospital and State Department of Corrections was apparently another positive influence in Corplan Corrections selecting the Lindsay area for the proposed facility.

According to the statement, 26 members of the Lindsay Industrial Foundation signed a letter of support sent to the Department of Corrections about the option for land purchase.

Mike Somers, spokesperson for the Industrial Foundation, said both the Foundation and Corplan put up $25,000 in earnest money for the purchase of land north of Lindsay. Corplan now has six months to get a contract with the Department of Corrections or the money will be forfeited.

State Senator Susan Paddack

Paddack Earns A+ Support On Children's Legislature

A legislative report card issued by the Oklahoma Institute for Child Advocacy (OICA) shows Sen. Susan Paddack earned the highest marks possible for her support of children's issues in the legislature. Paddack was shown to have voted for 100 percent of the legislation spotlighted by OICA for the 2008 session.

"Creating safe communities and healthy environments for children has a direct impact on each and every citizen of this state," said Paddack, D-Ada. By protecting our children and investing in their education and health now, we dramatically improve the quality of their lives in the present and in the future, and that helps all Oklahomans." Paddack authored three of the measures tracked by OICA this year. Senate Bill 1769 creates the Oklahoma Health Care Workers and Educators Assistance Act to provide scholarships to attract more students into nursing and allied health careers. It also creates additional faculty to expand the educational pipeline.

She was also author of Senate Bill 923 which requires schools to have automated external defibrillators at each school site, contingent upon federal funding or private donations.

Paddack also authored Senate Bill 1422 which creates a mental health first aid pilot program to train non-mental health professionals in how to support an individual in crisis until professional help can be obtained.

"Moving our state forward cannot happen without taking into consideration tomorrow's leaders and citizens—our children," Paddack said. "By creating good public policy today and making investments in our children now, we are laying the foundation for a brighter future for Oklahoma."

Early Childhood Initiative Expanding Into Garvin Co.

Ada Area Success by 6® has a new name - Ada Area Smart Start. It will continue to be the same program but will be expanded into Garvin, Johnston and Murray Counties.

Smart Start is Oklahoma's statewide early childhood initiative. Through a shared commitment, active collaboration and innovative leadership, Smart Start seeks to provide better opportunities for the state's children and families.

Its vision is that all Oklahoma children will be safe, healthy, eager to learn and ready to succeed by the time they enter school. The initiative focuses on four goals: parenting, health care, quality child care and school readiness for children from birth to age 6.

Locally, the program has been an initiative of Ada Regional United Way (ARUW). It now is a program of the Center of Continuing Education and Community Services at East Central University.

"Because of the required expansion of the initiative into additional counties, the ARUW Board made the decision to no longer act as the fiscal agent of the grant. The boundaries have outgrown our service area and it is now beyond our mission," said Latricia Bryant, ARUW executive director. "It is our goal to continue to be involved with Ada Area Smart Start and to help ensure its success in our community."

In addition to creating community awareness around early childhood issues, some of the projects Success by 6®/Smart See CHILDHOOD Page 3

WEEDS PART II

In my younger years, the yards, alleys, fence rows, and bar ditches around Bradley were infested with broom weeds, wax weeds, johnny gourds, and sunflowers. We viewed them as a natural part of the environment. The cotton fields, broomcorn fields, and corn fields also had weeds, but weeds of a different kind. The bane of cultivated fields was morning glories, johnson grass, careless weeds, and bull nettles. I vividly recall the problems these weeds caused as we labored to harvest the crops.

Morning glories grew in only a few fields, but when they entwined themselves around broomcorn stalks, they created a problem. My brother, Sam, rented a small field just behind the Bradley stores. Morning glories abounded in that field. In 1950, 1951, and 1952, I joined my brothers, Sam, Jim, and A.W., and my brother-in-law, Hap Rodgers, in harvesting that field. The five of us broke the entire field each time, one year on a moonlight night with a thunderstorm approaching from the northwest. Sam sometimes planted white Italian broomcorn, which produced large, strong stalks that were difficult to break.

Johnson grass was a major impediment in harvesting broomcorn. The rich bottom land of Roaring Creek and the Washita River grew excellent broomcorn as well as abundant johnson grass. Although the farmers fought to kill out the johnson grass, it grew anyway. Sometimes the johnson grass was nearly as tall as the broomcorn. The breakers would have to fight their way through the johnson grass to break the stalks into tables, which often included a mixture of broomcorn and johnson grass.

After the broomcorn was broken into tables, the johnson grass would stand higher than the heads of the workers, shutting off the slight breeze that helped to cool the sweat-soaked Johnnies. I worked on the broomcorn crew run by Runt Beverly. We were the best crew in the area. Ira Mann, skin. Sometimes the plants were hard to see among the broomcorn stalks and johnson grass. The lower legs were particularly vulnerable to bull nettles. I have encountered numerous bull nettles when I was hauling broomcorn as we hurried along the rows, loading the piles as fast as we could.

nearly unbearable.

A Bradley man, who was known to be truthful, told me a story that still makes me cringe. A group of German prisoners of war were harvesting broomcorn near Bradley. They were working without shirts, which also makes me cringe. Two of them cut bull nettles loose at the root and began a playful bull nettle fight, whipping each other with the stinging plants, laughing all the time. I shiver as I write these words.

I suppose that weeds do not play the role they once did. Many farmers now spray to kill weeds. Hand harvested crops have faded into the mists of time. But the ones of us who once struggled with these weeds still remember when they were the bane of our lives.

News from the State Capitol An Update from State Rep. Lisa Billy

Our great state is in crisis mode when it comes to our health.

Consistently, Oklahoma ranks in the bottom 10 in health issues. Areas such as diabetes, obesity, cardiovascular disease and smoking-related problems are widespread problems across our state. We also score poorly on the economic side of the health issue as well. According to the sharp stinging when they touched the

The worst bull nettles I recall were in a field owned by Ern Hawkins. The field was located about two miles east of Bradley just north of the Washita Valley. The low, sandy hills grew huge bull nettles that spread into large bushes. I particularly remember one day when I was breaking a table, and, as I swung my arm back to break the stalks, a large bull nettle branch became entangled in the stalk. As I brought my arm back, the bull nettle wrapped around my ribs. The pain was

I feel strongly that the poor health statistics in our state are a direct correlation to the lack of health insurance and preventative/primary care. And it is something that is completely preventable with adequate access to affordable insurance coverage. I hear about people going to the emergency room all the time for minor ailments, but because they don't have a primary care physician, they have to come to the emergency room for care. This is a problem other Oklahomans have to pay for with increased insurance rates for everyone. We must help Oklahomans buy a basic plan to boost preventative care and help them obtain a primary care doctor for routine visits. I believe we could be close to finding some solutions. There is a pending federal waiver which would expand the Insure Oklahoma program, meaning more of our fellow citizens could purchase affordable health care. The waiver would allow the private programs to cover children in families of four making below $63,600. Also, it would increase coverage of working adults in a family of four making less than $53,000. It would also assist employers with out to 250 workers and college students up to age 23.

There is obviously much to be done in this area. In fact, this task force will meet again Tuesday, Aug. 12 at 9 a.m. to further discuss the improvements we can make to ensure better health care for all Oklahomans. The ultimate goal is to find solutions that give families control of their well-being, not creating a government-run bureaucracy. In short, this state needs to start taking its own health seriously. I hope these task force meetings are the start to a better future for us when it comes to our health. Lisa J. Billy (R-Purcell) serves District 42 of the Oklahoma House of Representatives. Those are all giant problems when it comes to the overall heath and welfare of Oklahoma citizens and something must be done to change that. Farmers And Ranchers Need To Attend Regional Water Meetings

As Oklahoma's largest updates about meetings and user of water, farmers and ranchers are strongly encouraged to participate in a series of regional water meetings beginning August 7, the president of the state's largest farm organization said today.

"We need to make sure agriculture is well represented in any discussion about water," said Oklahoma Farm Bureau President Mike Spradling. "This is important because we're talking about the future management of Oklahoma's water resources."

Approximately 60 Farm Bureau leaders have been selected to participate in the meetings, but Spradling said anyone can attend and discuss their vision of a future water plan. "It's a simple fact that without water we cannot produce food, so farmers and ranchers need to be in the front row at these meetings," Spradling said State water officials have planned the meetings as a step toward developing a comprehensive water plan in 2011. During each of the 11 regional meetings, participants will categorize and prioritize their region's issues, which will set the agenda for the next phase in the process, the planning workshops to be held in 2009. In each region, there will be two meetings on the same day, one at 3 p.m. and one at 6:30 p.m. At the 3 p.m. meeting, the participants will prioritize issues for their region. This A session is open to the public; however, the public will be asked to save their comments until the evening meeting. A Web site for the Oklahoma Comprehensive Water Plan - www.environ.okstate.edu/ owrii/waterplan/index.asp has been created to serve as the main communication channel during the planning process. Office Hours: Monday thru Thursday • 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

As we approach the beginning of a new school year, it is an appropriate time to reflect on the awesome responsibility we have as educators.

This past week, Brenda and I were blessed with the opportunity to keep our three-year-old grandson. He's the oldest in a family that consists of a one year old sister, and soon-to-be twin brothers.

In his own words, "Well, I guess those twins turned into boys. And they're pretty lucky to have a big brother."

It's amazing how well one can get to know the world by looking at it from the eyes of a three-yearold. If only we could all re-capture that zest for life, that wide-eyed innocence that dominates his world!

We took him to a wedding last Saturday, and it was interesting to watch the interaction between the kids. At the hotel, observing how excited he became when a few other kids came in the pool with some water toys, I suddenly realized that in just one short year, he would enter the real world of school.

His parents have done a wonderful job of raising him to this point, watching what he eats, reading to him regularly, limiting his television exposure to just a few special programs, and, most of all, being there to protect him from the awful things that humankind at its worst has to offer.

Looking into the sad eyes of some other children there, as their mom talked on her cell phone to her ex-husband about who would take the kids this weekend, I realized how much different some children's lives are, even at the tender age of three or four.

A feeling of apprehension gripped me as I realized that all too soon this little innocent grandson would be thrust into a competitive setting, a place where all the kids there need the kind of attention that only loving parents can give.

It was then that another thought struck me. I felt a feeling of comfort, knowing that if I had a child or grandchild entering school for the first time, or at any level for that matter, I would feel very good if that place happened to be the Lindsay School System. We have a wonderful, caring staff, people who love their jobs and love the kids they serve.

We can talk all day long about test results, and how schools are judged by how their students perform on this test or that test, and how we certainly don't want to "leave any child behind." That's all fine and dandy, but it's not enough.

Show me a school where teachers love and nurture the kids, where there is a safe environment where people really care about the students who walk those halls, and I'll show you a successful school.

It's been said that kids don't care about how much you know until they know how much you care. Caring doesn't always necessarily mean giving them what they want, but it does mean giving them what they need.

As we enter this new school year, it is imperative that we do not look it as just another year. What we must realize is that we have about 75 four-year-olds who will be entering school for the first time, with that wide-eyed innocence, and around the same number of seniors who will culminate their public school education, as they look hopefully to the future. For those 150 students, and everyone in between, we need to do our best to capture the best of who we are. If we will do that every hour of every day, we will have helped enable our students to realize the best of what they may ultimately achieve. What a tremendous responsibility! We are blessed to have the people in place to make it happen. With your help, we will make it a year to remember!

Turn off the highway and let's go down the Wallville Road. With the continuing saga of Clarence Cecil (Hoot) Hunt, 1911-1983. Now, if it had been up to dad Hunt, he would have died on that 120 acres of rented land southeast of Wallville. Married four years with 2 sons and one on the way, they had lived just outside of Maysville on Scrivner Hill when you could see the trains coming through the country from the front porch. But, he had lucked upon these 120 acres of prime farmland, his dream of a lifetime. He had cattle, horses, pigs, a big hay barn and a bottomland covered with pecan trees. He raised broomcorn, cotton, and hay. In the summer there was a properous row af apricot trees and in the fall tons of pecans. But, as hard as he worked the finances never outweighed the cost of living. He went to work in the oilfield to supplement the income. But, despite the sweat, toil, and long hours, it wasn't to be. In late 1960 the Hunts purchased 10 acres of Indian land in the very heart of Wallville. Hoot Hunt had a house moved in, land cleared, ponds dug, a small cowlot and cellar. This was home, roots had been planted, the children went to Hughes School and graduated there. In walking distance of the little country church where family and friends all attended. It looked as if Hoot and Ruby Hunt's moving days were over down the Wallville Road.

Greetings associates with Legend #818. Where we say there's a place in the sun, where there's hope for everyone. Wallville, the land of the free, and the home of the brave. Where on August 1 it was 109 degrees.

FYI-Clarence and Ruby Hunt were married March 28, 1946, not March 24 as erroneusly reported by Mrs. Gina Cable last week.

Leota said they decided to go while gas is cheap.

The Wallville Veteran's Committee salutes the family of Robert and Gwen Phipps of Fayetteville, NC, now living in Georgia. Who in the 1960's opened their home to many soldiers stationed at Ft. Bragg, NC, a civilian USO Club.

Well, as the years rolled by, the Hunt family seemed happy in their new home. Butm then Momma got itching feet, she longed for town life and garage sales. Pa Hunt always eager to please and keep harmony in the home sold out and moved to the bustling township of Maysville. He had enough from the sale to buy his own place. With a big front porch and swing, Hoot was happy
